

I am totally opposed to the weakening of Indiana's telephone privacy bill. It should be the prerogative of the consumer to choose freedom from harassing sales calls. Businesses have access to consumers through alternative means such as television, radio, mass mailings and billboards. These means of communication are sufficient without adding the telephone as a means of sales. No one should ever have to suffer the invasive behavior of persistent telemarketers who won't take no for an answer.